Synopsis

The New York Times Bestselling story of first love, family, loss, and betrayal for fans of John Green, Jojo Moyes, Emma Straub, and Rainbow Rowell

“We were all heading for each other on a collision course, no matter what. Maybe some people are just meant to be in the same story.”

At first, Jude and her twin brother are Noah and Jude; inseparable. Noah draws constantly and is falling in love with the charismatic boy next door, while daredevil Jude wears red-red lipstick, cliff-dives, and does all the talking for both of them. Years later, they are barely speaking. Something has happened to change the twins in different yet equally devastating ways . . . but then Jude meets an intriguing, irresistible boy and a mysterious new mentor. The early years are Noah’s to tell; the later years are Jude’s. But they each have only half the story, and if they can only find their way back to one another, they’ll have a chance to remake their world. This radiant, award-winning novel from the acclaimed author of The Sky Is Everywhere will leave you breathless and teary and laughing—often all at once. Gr 9 Up—A resplendent novel from the author of The Sky Is Everywhere (Dial, 2010). Fraternal twins and burgeoning artists Jude and Noah are inseparable until puberty hits and they find themselves competing for boys, a spot at an exclusive art school, and their parents' affections. Told in alternating perspectives and time lines, with Noah's chapters taking place when they are 13 and Jude's when they are 16, this novel explores how it's the people closest to us who have the power to both rend us utterly and knit us together. Jude's takes are peppered with entries from her bible of superstitions and conversations with her grandmother's ghost, and Noah continuously imagines portraits (complete with appropriately artsy titles) to cope with his emotions. In the intervening years, a terrible tragedy has torn their family apart, and the chasm between the siblings grows ever wider. Vibrant imagery and lyrical prose propel readers forward as the twins experience first love, loss, betrayal, acceptance, and forgiveness. Art and wonder fill each page, and threads of magical realism lend whimsy to the narrative. Readers will forgive convenient coincidences because of the characters' in-depth development and the swoon-worthy romances. The novel's evocative exploration of sexuality, grief, and sibling relationships will ring true with teens. For fans of Rainbow Rowell's Fangirl (St. Martin's, 2013) and Melina Marchetta's realistic fiction. You get the sense [the] characters are bursting through the words, breaking free of normal metaphors and constructions, jubilantly trying to rise up from the prison of language . . . The book celebrates art's capacity to heal, but it also shows us how we excavate meaning from the art we cherish, and how we find reflections of ourselves within it. . . . This book is a rebuttal to anyone suggesting YA, because it tells stories of young people, is somehow of lesser stuff. I  All Give You the Sun is literature. Full stop. It's a book where teenagers think in almost indulgently poetic language while still sounding genuinely adolescent. It's two separate but equally intoxicating love stories. . . . Jandy Nelson's I'll Give You the Sun is beautiful, breathtaking, bewildering, and a little bizarre, but I can't get it out of my head. Somehow I knew I'd love it and yet it still surprised me. Jude and Noah Sweetwine are twins, so close they often think of themselves as Noah and Jude. They can read each other's thoughts and know each other's fears. At age 13, both are artistically creative and emotionally sensitive in their own ways, yet they're also quite different. Jude is a daredevil who loves to surf, take risks, and is rapidly becoming the type of girl who intrigues and attracts all the boys, while Noah tries to live his life unnoticed so he won't be bullied, lives in his own artistic fantasy world, and is fighting his attraction to/obsession with the new boy next door. Yet three years later, Noah and Jude are barely speaking, and everything has changed. Jude lives in constant fear and has isolated herself from the possibility of a romantic relationship, and while she feels a profound need to create art, she can't seem to express herself the way she wants to. And Noah has completely given up art, dives off of cliffs, and become the person no one ever thought he'd be. What happened in their lives, and between them, to change everything so drastically? When Jude meets a charismatic young man she can't stop thinking about, someone with a connection to Noah, and then meets a troubled artist whose talent may help her free her artistic block, these encounters provide answers and yet more questions. "Or maybe a person is just made up of a lot of people," I say. "Maybe we're accumulating these new selves all the time." Hauling them in as we make choices good and bad, as we screw up, step up, lose our minds, find our minds, fall apart, fall in love, as we grieve, grow, retreat from the world, dive into the world, as we make things, as we break things." I'll Give You the Sun shifts in perspective between Noah and Jude. Noah's narration takes place when the twins are 13, Jude's takes place three years later. Each of them holds half of the answers yet aren't willing to share them with the other to complete their understanding. How can a relationship that was so interdependent, so interconnected, turn so painful? "This is what I want: I want to grab my brother's hand and run back through time, losing years like coats falling from our shoulders. Things don't really turn out like you think." This is a book about the half-truths we tell ourselves and our reluctance to see what is in front of us and say what we truly feel. It's a book about following your heart and accepting the truth, even if it leads you somewhere you're afraid of, and realizing you must live the life that ignites your passions. It's also a book about how simple it is to hurt those closest to us, and how the simplest actions can cause so much pain. Nelson is an absolutely exquisite writer. I cannot tell you how many sentences I read over and over again because they took my breath away. That being said, I found Noah's narration while tremendously heartfelt and emotionally provoking a little difficult to follow, because he speaks in a stream of consciousness-type way, as he sees everything in his head as a painting. It took a little getting used to, but it truly touched my heart. Jude and Noah are such vivid, beautiful characters I absolutely loved, even as I wanted to shake them for making the mistakes they did. This is one of those books I wish were so much longer because I didn't want to give up these characters. I hope someday Nelson gives us a glimpse into their lives again, but even if she doesn't, I know she is an author I'll need to keep reading. This one blew me away.

I finished this book last night and seriously could not sleep because I finished the book. I bought this book based solely off of Reviews and I did not regret this one one bit. It's so beautifully written. I definitely related to all the characters in this book. They were flawed without you actually hating one character. The world Noah lives in is so beautiful that you yourself will paint that beautiful world with the vivid imagery Jandy uses to describe it. This book felt so nostalgic for me, bringing me back to all those firsts for me: love, heart break, lost of innocence, realities. And then when Jude comes in with her perspective, (ugh) she reminded me of all those moments after all the firsts are gone and you build layers and layers of walls to surround yourself in so those on the outside keep away. When you first start the book, Noah and Jude are like every twins you've ever imagined doing things together and reading each other minds. But with age, you grow apart, sometimes from those you were closest too. You read from Noah's past and Jude's present future. You read where and what cause them to end up how they are. How little lies can cause such detrimental damage to not just you but those around you, and that in the end, you have to be true to yourself to set yourself free from those lies. I loved this book and had already started recommending it to friends and because I seriously buy books off of the reviews on . So I needed to write one for this book just in case there is someone like me who buys book off reviews too :) FYI: this is my first book review. My thoughts are everywhere trying to gather what I can to do this book justice. :)

Thank you to AudioBookSync.com for giving this Audio Book away during the Summer program last year...I would like to stand up and give this book an endless standing ovation - complete with jumping, screaming, whooping, and cheering.... I loved this book so much that I ordered a hard copy to place on my book shelf and drool over whenever I walked past. I loved this book so much that I think I may read and reread it many times over. I loved this book so much that I want to purchase a copy for each and every single friend and family member and insist that they read it. Do you see the pattern here? I LOVED this book!!!!Being that it was a recording that I listened to, I have to give extreme complements to the two readers. Since this book is told from both perspectives of Jude and Noah, a male and a female reader where needed. They both read with such intensity and feeling that I felt like I was in the room with the characters. So full of emotion and feelings where their depictions, that I could not stop myself from laughing out loud or sobbing like a baby during certain moments. I truly did not want the book to end.I must also say that the writing style is unbelievable. To me it seemed almost perfect. The imagery was spot on. The details immaculate. The characters were living, breathing people with so much detail and emotions that they walked right off the page for me. I related to them and loved them immediately. Furthermore, the topics handled by this story where heavy subjects - ones that you cannot just easily play with. They were handled with care and so much kindness.... each subject was examined by multiple point of views and with no bias - ultimately ending in a reasonable conclusion that made sense.Everything about this book was amazing. I highly and extremely recommend this book to all High School and older readers. You will not be disappointed.Happy Reading!
